White Desert Antarctica launches private jet service to most remote location on earth

White Desert, Antarctica's first and only luxury camp, is launching an exclusive private jet service from Cape Town, South Africa to Antarctica. Guests can now fly to the continent in the utmost style and comfort with a maximum of only 12 clients on each departure. A once in a lifetime experience, a visit to the White Desert's Whichaway Camp has attracted guests such as legendary NASA astronaut Buzz Aldrin, Bear Grylls and Prince Harry.

With the first departure scheduled for November 2017, a Gulfstream jet will traverse an incredible icepack of the Southern Ocean before passing into 24 hours of some of the most iconic mountains on Earth as the backdrop – named Wolf. The flight is carbon neutral and White Desert is committed to a strict line with strict ecological guidelines. The Gulfstream flight is a unique experience. On the flight, guests will enjoy a selection of delicacies including sushi and wagyu steaks, all garnished with thousand year old glacial ice from Antarctica.

For the 2017/2018 season and beyond, White Desert will be offering guests a range of private jet trips. Their signature experience "Emperors and South Pole" is an 8-day trip into the very heart of Antarctica. Starting at the White Desert's Whichaway camp, guests will fly two hours along the dramatic coast to visit a 6,000-strong Emperor penguin colony and their newly hatched chicks; one of the most remote and unseen wildlife spectacles on Earth. Further highlights include a visit to the American science station at the Geographic South Pole, the lowest point on earth. Also available this season is the 4 day "Ice and Mountains" adventure and the "Greatest Day", a private chartered one day trip to Antarctica. The new experiences are designed to cater for time-strapped adventurers wishing to experience the real interior of Antarctica. Another exciting addition to the 2017 season is a one-off trip hosted by NASA Astronaut Terry Virts, which will include a special Antarctic screening of his recently released IMAX movie 'A Beautiful Planet', with Terry narrating astounding tales from his time as International Space Station commander. Limited space are available on 2017/18 trips and bookings are now open for the 2018/19 season.
