

How's that for a ski break?

Lots of people like a few days on the piste this time of year. But the Invesco Perpetual Challenge team were at it for two months in their record-breaking journey across Antarctica. And they returned with a photo album to die for . . .

Antarctic crossing . . . the four members of the Invesco Perpetual Challenge team (sk) and (top) celebrate their arrival at the south pole. They completed the first coast-to-coast man-hauling traverse of Antarctica from the Ross ice shelf via the Trans-Antarctic Mountains and the pole to the Ferris ice shelf on the western perimeter. (Previous traverses have gone in the opposite direction, descending through the mountains.) The 1,650km journey took them 58 days

Photographs: Invesco Perpetual Challenge team